She felt and acted her part. The words Mr. Carroll had given her to say were words that appealed to her womanhood, and she uttered them with deep feeling and earnestness. The part she plays, that of a woman who, stung by the innuendoes of society against her mother's name, holdly braves seelety, and to sheld the man she loves, consents to a union with the one she pates, is a partitlat must strongly a possi to loves, consents to a union with the one she bates, is a part that must strongly appeal to her emotional nature. In the hands of a genius the part might have been made immortal. It might have ranked with 'Camille' and other plays depicting great sacrifice. As it is the genius of the actress surpasses the capabilities of the role. Mr. Carroll failed to realize his conception. Mille. Rhea grasped it, but the limitations of the play fettered her. ANOTHER REMINISCENCE.

A Reported Etterance by General Sherman Just Refore the War

A special dispatch from Richmond, Va., to the Philadelphia Times says: "E. M. Richeson, a thoroughly reliable gentleman of this city, who was proprietor of a wharf boat at Vicksburg, Miss., at the breaking out of the war, this evening makes public the substance of an interview be had with Major, now General W. T.
Sherman, at that period. Mr. Richeson says he was aroused from his sleep one night by Captain Spotts, of the steamer Eclipse, who introduced him to Major Sherman, who was then in command of the regulars being transported from Baton Rouge Arsenal to the northern side of the line.

Sherman said:

"'Mr. Richeson, I had you waked up to ask if you would be kind enough to take charge of the corpse of one of my men and have the body decently buried?"

"Mr. Richeson told him he would. He then asked the Major what he thought of the situation

The social event of the season in Alexandria, Vs. was the marriage, yesterday afternoon, of Mr. Robert Lee Hoy to Miss Maggie T. Breen, a young lady prominent in society circles in that city, at St. Mary's Church, by the Rev. Father O'Kane. The church was thronged by the youth and beauty of old Bell Haven, and as the music of the marriage march pealed forth announcing the arrival of the happy couple a hush spread o'er the formerly gay assemblage in waiting. in waiting.

The New York Times makes the following sketch of the play:

Horfore Fullant is the daughter of an American woman and a foreign nebleman, who married her for money and ill-treated her. The girl, having come into possession of her cestates, is living in America and fashionable society, similar in its motives and manners to that in which her unfortunate mother was reared. Amid this society, the young Counter, who speaks English with a foreign accent, though Puritan blood courses in her veins, moves somewhat in the character of a teacher and philosopher. She warms American girls against foreign marriages, and take about her own father in a way that reveals a rather uply disposition. Nevertheless, she is beautiful and pure, and she fervently loves a young New Yorker, who returns her passion with ardor. A certain Burges, a Beantard of noble blood and a very black-hearted rascal withat, is determined that the Fuliane estates and the money of Horfors's mother shall not pass into American hands, and he proposes to save them by wedding the Counters binned. Bo first attempts to secure this end by defaming the character of Horfors's in the presence of her lover and is knocked down for his pains. Then he lovely and he is a conspiracy, but his best istal plans fall, and he is determined of a new in waiting.

The young bride-elect wore a costume befitting the occasion, and was the object of much admiration from the large number of friends and relatives present. The ushers were Messrs Frank Hill, Will Entwise and C. Deidle. After the ceremony a majority of the guests present repaired to the home of the bride's parents, where an excellent collation of all the heart could wish was set before them, to which they did ample justice. The presents were many, and were tice. The presents were many, and were both costly and useful. The gay assemblage broke up in time for the happy couple to reach the northern-bound train for a short Northern tour amid the congratulations and well-wishes of all present.

and well-wishes of all present.

Among the many present were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hoy, parents of the groom, and family; Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Fugitt and son, Mr. Clark and family and Miss. Lizzle Graham, of Washington; Mrs. Thomas L. Monroe, Mrs. Krichett and family, Miss Carrie Atwell, Miss Alice Burley, Miss Alice Patterson, Miss Greene, Miss Smith and Miss Noland, and Messrs. Demonet, Weidman, Patterson, Clark, Hill Brodbeck, Entwisle and Deidle. In criticising the performance of a new play there are so many elements to consider that it is difficult, unless there is a lecided preponderance in one direction or the other, to pronounce a satisfactory verdict. The elements entering into last

A Most Worthy Promotion.

The promotion of Mr. James W. White to the foremanship of the Government Bludery places a most worthy and capable man at the head of that establishment and pleases a host of his friends. No man in the public service is better qualified for the position he fills than Mr. White. "White by name, and white by nature" is the verdict of all who know him. He has been in the service so long that he knows every detail of the business of the position, and knows how to discharge its duties to the best advantage of the office. He has the esteem of every man under him, and the confidence of his superiors. No office under the Government is more fortunate in its staff than is the Government Printing-Office. From its worthy head, Hon. S. P. Rounds, down, every position is filled by men just fitted for the places they occupy. If the new Administration is sincer in its profession of Civil Service Reform there will be no changes in the Government Printing-Office. clever hit at certain folibles to be found only on this side of the Atlantic.

But the spectator waits in vain for the satire. If the play is satirical the satire is so effectively hidden that its force is lost. One pompous old individual, Allan McAllan, M. D., by name, is much given to social philosophy and trite maxims, but even his remarks cannot be called satirical. In Mrs. Van Cortland, of whom the play-bill speaks as "a luminary in religious circles," is found the representative of a certain class who dishonor their religious pretentions. It is evident that Mr. Carroll put in some of his best efforts as a satirist on this character. The satire is too broad to be artistic. At times it descends to open ridicale.

Perhaps the satire is to be found in Miss. Emily Van Cortland, a gushing young aldy who dotes on poetry, and a rhyming young clown named Algernon Sydney Stabbs. Here again Mr. Carroll has mistaken caricature for satire. Perhaps it is to be found in Judge Van Cortland, "an ornament of the bench and a pillar of society." But it would be an injustice to Mr. Carroll to suppose that the fame of the play as a "great American satire" rests upon the few commonplace remarks of this eminently passive character, who does not manifest at any time either the ability or the disposition to utter a satire. It is certain that neither the actions nor the remarks of the rest of the characters are in the least satirical. They are too deep in the meshes of the genteel villain's plot to act or utter a satire. As a satire, then, the play appears to be a lamentable failure.

The play is not without its commendable. hanges in the Government Printing-Of-

A special dispatch, dated last night, from Richmond, in the Baltimore American

The play is not without its commendable features. It affords opportunities for some quite clever declamation. Arthur Morton's description, in the first act, of the alluring Lorelei, although as old as the everlasting hills, is well written, and rendered, as it is, to slow music, is rather effective. The scene between the Counters and Baraga, in the third act, when the former, after a struggle, consents to wed the latter, gives Mille. Rhea a slight opportunity to display her ability as an emotional actress. The scene in the fourth act between her and Arthur Morton gives them both a chance to enact the conventional lovers' quarrel, in which they tragically cast each other off only to be reunited—as the placid audience knew they will be—before the curtain falls. Barago is given his opportunity when the warrants, affidavits and detectives pour in upon him at 10-25 o'clock, just exactly the time, according to all well-regulated melomand the virtuous are rewarded. Calmly he draws a cigarette from his pocket, then a match, and without as much as a "by your leave"—which is very impolite and wholly unnatural for a well-bred villain, although it is conventional—he lights the roll and suniters gracefully from the room, followed by the detective as soon as he can recever from his admiration at the suparalleled effrontery of the knave. Mr. Henley performed his part artistically.

The support as a whole was strong. Mr. J. R. Amorry, as Subble was amusing, and Richmond, in the Baltimore American, says:

"To-night Mr. Moody closed his series of revival meetings in this city. They have been very successful. When he first came to Richmond the people were quite cool on account of the alleged disparaging utterances against Lee and Jackson; but his prompt denial and apology removed this prejudice, and he has had immense congregations. The widow of Stonewall Jackson, who lives in Richmond, has attended several of the services, and was introduced to Mr. Moody.

THE GRANT BILL.

Talk About the Measure Passed Vesterday.

There is a good deal of talk to-day in the House about the Edmunds-Grant bill, which period the Senate yesterday, General Resecrans, chairman of the House Military Committee, is against the bill. General Slocum is also against it. He is in favor of the bill which passed the Senate last February and which mentions General Grant's name. The Edmunds bill, which went through the Senate yesterday, does not mention General Grant, but it ie, of course, meant for his benefit. General Sleenen thinks that the Edmunds bill would be in direct opposition to the President's pestion in the Fitz-John Porteresse. It is not likely, however, that he will find much following. General Slocum says that to pass the Edmunds bill would be to inderse Ferdinaud Ward and his actions. There has undoubtedly been a change of sentiment in regard to General Grant. It is very probable that the Edmunds bill through that sentiment—despite the opposition of General Slocum and others—will become a law. Grant's name. The Edmunds bill, which become a law.

The Secret of Success. The Philadelphia Times thus disposes of the cry of the theatre managers about had business:

"The success of 'Fedora,' as of many of the other performances at the opera-house this winter, sufficiently answers the wall about bad business. Give the theatregoers a good entertainment, and, under ordinary circumstances, they will pay for it. There are occasional exceptions, no doubt. We can all recall performances of conspicuous artistic merit that were not sustained. Usually in such cases we find some flagrant faults of business management, which have produced the same results in all periods of theatrical history. It is also an undeniable fact that puffery, direct and indirect, has attained such importance in this business that even the greatest artists hardly can make headway against it. But taking the 'attractions' that are before the public at this time it will be found that nearly all of those that deserve success are doing well. The failures are among those that have no merit to entitle them to live or that have on that the temporary interest which for a time won popularity."

The Strang Case.

Secretary Chandler has written a letter to Captain Ramssy, the superintendent of the Naval Academy, in answer to the request of the latter for a court of inquiry to investigate the causes of the death of Cadet Strang. In this letter the Secretary says that Captain Ramssy's report concerning the case of Cadet Strang makes any further investigation unnecessary and unwise. He adds: "There is no occasion for any general investigation of the condition of the Naval Academy during the time it has been under your charge. No charges, or even criticisms, have been made worthy of such notice." notice.
